

The Indiana School for the Deaf Presents

Transitioning to a Cross-Cultural Classroom Jennifer Place Lewis and Felisa Wilson

9:00 am- 4:00 p.m.

October 29, 2011

ISD Library; Rm G28

Indiana School for the Deaf

1200 E. 42nd Street, Indianapolis, IN 46205

This course will address how educational interpreters can facilitate diverse transitions and give practical implementations for educational interpreters and the students they work within their educational placements. Interpreters will have the opportunity to delve into the diversities found in a classroom, interpreter placement in mainstream settings and assess the role of interpreters as a member of the IEP team.

This workshop is geared towards educational interpreters. The content knowledge level for this workshop is "SOME."

Jennifer Place Lewis is both an educational Interpreter and Educator. She received her original degree in Deaf Education from Ball State University and her MA in BI-Lingual Bi-Cultural ASL Education from McDaniel College in Westminster, Maryland. This educational background has given her the opportunity to support various learning styles while mentoring in cross-cultural mediation techniques. These techniques are currently the basis for the collection of data to be used in support of a curriculum designed for interpreters by interpreters. Jennifer continues to be inspired by her loving husband and son.

Felisa Wilson-Demos grew up in southern Indiana. She obtained her BS in Deaf Education from Ball State University holds CI, CT, and IIC certificates. She is proud to have been an Educational Interpreter for K-12 as well as at the collegiate levels for more than 15 years. She has served on the ICRID board as a member at large and is co –chair of the Educational Interpreters of Indiana committee under ICRID. When Felisa is not interpreting she is doing her favorite, most important job; mother to 2 ½ yr old Jaxsen.
